MET HIS MATCH.

Sullivan Surrenders His Title to James J. Corbett.

It Was Settled in Twenty-One Thrilling But One-Sided Rounds.

Sullivan Was Badly Punished and Had a Defeat-Come Out of the Fight Without a Scratch—Declared "Champion of the World."

THE OLYMPIC CLUB HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 8.—It took twenty-one rounds to settle the fight between James J. Corbett and John L. Sullivan, and the latter is no longer champion of the world, Corbett now owns that title.

At no time during those twenty-one rounds was Sullivan "in it." He was outclassed at every point. Corbett indeed proved a wonder. His generalship surprised even his greatest admirers, and his knowledge of ring tactics was marvelous. Sullivan was knocked out completely. He was beaten down with heavy right and left blows, and for the first time in his life knew what it is to be defeated. Long after the ten seconds were up he lay upon the sand in the ring helpless. The sand itself was soaking with his blood, and he, the winner of a hundred battles, lay in his own blood, a terribly whipped man.

The ovation that Corbett received when he was declared the winner was something tremendous, and he walked around the ring kissing and hugging his friends. When Sullivan "came to" he made a speech in the center of the ring, saying that he was glad America got the championship, and that he had fought once too many times in his life.

The battle was really a one-sided affair. Throughout it all Corbett smiled and was entirely "at himself." Sullivan was not. The doing so, Sullivan Corbett struck him when and where he wanted set him wild.

It was an inglorious defeat and is best left in the following account of the fight by rounds.

FIRST ROUND.

At the bell the glances shook hands. Sullivan led with his left and missed. Corbett stopped and swung his right arm around in a swinging manner. Sullivan rushed Jim to the ropes, but did not land. Up to this time Corbett had not led, and was being roundly for not doing so. Sullivan rushed, swung his right, but fell short. Sullivan's lips were clinched together, and he looked savage. Corbett was not a single blow reached him. Although John rushed him no less than five times and led with his left and right half a dozen times, he did not touch the Californian. Corbett did not attempt to lead.

This round opened tame. Both were willing to rest, and to spar without leading. Corbett stopped a hard left hander from Sullivan. Sullivan led two or three times, but with an open hand. Sullivan finally attempted at rush, and got a counter on the face, but it was not much. The round was exceedingly uneventful. Sullivan had lost his spirit of aggressiveness, and Corbett was content to rest.

SECOND ROUND.

Sullivan was angry and Corbett smiling. Sullivan tried to get to him but fell short; again he tried it but failed; again Sullivan led with his right in an open hand on Corbett's face very lightly; finally Sullivan rushed him to the ropes and landed lightly with his left and right, Corbett getting away by heavy ducking. Corbett got back with the left on his stomach, his first lead on the fight. They kept fiddling and Corbett kept dancing round. Sullivan attempted no more leads until nearly the close of the round, when he hit Corbett on the shoulder with his right. Just as the gong sounded Corbett pushed his left hand into Sullivan's stomach and was loudly cheered.

THIRD ROUND.

Sullivan led, but by an easy duck Corbett was out of range. Sullivan rushed; Corbett ran, but turned and stopped him. Sullivan landed on back lightly. Sullivan again got home on back with left as Corbett ran. Corbett landed twice on the stomach hard and strong, and got away without a return. Again Sullivan led and missed. Corbett again landed on stomach, followed up by another. He was loudly cheered. Sullivan rushed and missed. Corbett received a soaker in the stomach. Corbett, by beautiful ducks and side steps avoided several vicious aimed left-handers.

FOURTH ROUND.

Sullivan tried, but again it was the old thing. Corbett was out of range. Sullivan pushed forward for a rush and then stopped, and as he did Corbett put his right on his face lightly. Sullivan thought he had him cornered. He feinted two or three times for territory to lead, but Corbett stayed away. Sullivan swung hard with his right, but it was the empty air. Corbett countered with his left on the nose. Sullivan in rushing forward, went into Corbett's right left with his mouth. Corbett's right then found lodgment on Sullivan's face. They were again in a rush, the gong sounded for the close of the round.

FIFTH ROUND.

Two light exchanges opened the round. Sullivan rushed, but was met with a stiff left in the face. Sullivan swung with all his might and Corbett just missed it. As the round rushed forward for a rush Corbett met him with a straight blow on the nose, which turned on a big tap of blood. Corbett followed it up with several on the injured spot. He followed with a hard left hander on Sullivan's face, and in the close of the round had the big fellow at his mercy. Corbett was cheered loudly. Sullivan's face was smeared with blood when the round closed.

The big fellow landed better after he had been sponged in his corner. He was fairly fresh, but he was not so bright as the lead. Then with a left he landed the first blow. It was a light one on the stomach. Sullivan led with the left with his left hand. The next time he attempted a lead Corbett met him with a swinging left on the nose. Again he tried it, but fell short. Sullivan's hands from Corbett turned on the tap again from his nose. Corbett, by a straight lead, landed his left lightly in his face.

SEVENTH ROUND.

This round was noticeable for the fact that it marked the greatest number of rounds Sullivan had ever fought. Marquis of Queensberry rules. Sullivan was the first to start. He moved up but did not lead. Corbett landed in face with his left. Sullivan was now on the defensive, but Corbett landed on his stomach. Again John's left and right were short in a rush, and Corbett punished him. Sullivan was now on a swinging left hander. Then Sullivan stepped forward and got a hot one on his left hip. Corbett's right hander, another left on Sullivan's stomach, which now bled profusely. Corbett rushed him to the ropes, and a left hander with a right following landed on Sullivan's stomach. There was no hissing now, but everybody with money on the California boy were cheering loudly.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN.

EIGHTH ROUND.

Sullivan again tried to close quarters, with hands down, and got left on the side of his face. They flitted, and then Sullivan led, but Corbett was not there. Sullivan landed a good right on Corbett's face, but he got a bad one in his left eye. Twice he put up his hand to brush the blood away from his eyes. Up to this time the only blow that had been landed on Corbett. The latter put his hand hard on Sullivan's face. He was now on a rushing left hander, and hit him full in the face with his left. A second time he hit him in the face with his right, but it was light.

NINTH ROUND.

TENTH ROUND.

This round opened tame. Both were willing to rest, and to spar without leading. Corbett stopped a hard left hander from Sullivan. Sullivan led two or three times, but with an open hand. Sullivan finally attempted at rush, and got a counter on the face, but it was not much. The round was exceedingly uneventful. Sullivan had lost his spirit of aggressiveness, and Corbett was content to rest.

ELEVENTH ROUND.

Sullivan swung his right and turned clear around, but in doing so caught a left in the face. He led again, but missed. Corbett landed with left on stomach. Corbett feinted with his left, but swung his right on face. He followed with left in John's stomach. Corbett again led with his right and landed full in Sullivan's face with an open hand. As Sullivan pushed forward Corbett upper cut him in the stomach. Again Sullivan led and missed. Sullivan was now on the stomach clean without return. Sullivan attempted a rush, but was stopped with two beautiful ones on the injured nose.

TWELFTH ROUND.

Corbett again opened it with a left on the stomach. Next he got home a swinging left hander on the stomach without return. He repeated the dose, and again he had nothing to take away. Sullivan landed with his open hand on Corbett's face, but got left on face. Sullivan's guard was now down very low to protect his stomach. Sullivan tried to rush, but got left on face. Corbett. He smiled tauntingly, and just managed to keep out of range. He landed his left three times in succession on Sullivan's face, and then swung around cheering for himself when the round closed.

THIRTEENTH ROUND.

Sullivan led a counter hander on shoulder. There was a long space of sparring, and Sullivan got out of range of a left hander. Corbett put his right on Sullivan's face, and as he did Corbett put his right on his face lightly. Sullivan thought he had him cornered. He feinted two or three times for territory to lead, but Corbett stayed away. Sullivan swung hard with his right, but it was the empty air. Corbett countered with his left on the nose. Sullivan in rushing forward, went into Corbett's right left with his mouth. Corbett's right then found lodgment on Sullivan's face. They were again in a rush, the gong sounded for the close of the round.

FOURTEENTH ROUND.

Sullivan led, but Corbett by a side step was out of range and caught him with a left-hand counter. Sullivan landed an open-handed slap on Corbett's face. The champion acted more like he was sparring than fighting, and all his leads were open ones at that. Corbett's left again got home on the stomach. Sullivan landed his left on Corbett's face. Corbett had not indulged in any run-away tactics. He simply kept out of range, and after the second round did as much fighting as Sullivan, who was on the defensive most of the time.

FIFTEENTH ROUND.

Sullivan showed more spirit in this round. He tried to rush, but didn't reach. Every one of his blows fell short and he received two rights in the face in return. Then Corbett put his left clean on Sullivan's stomach, and then a counter. Sullivan stepped up for a lead, but before his hand came forward Corbett hit in his face with left. Sullivan stepped with his open left hand, received a straight left on his nose. Then he walked around and every time the big fellow hit his side he took him out of danger. The last blow in the round was a swinging left hander on Sullivan's vitalizing department.

SIXTEENTH ROUND.

Sullivan's left eye was swollen. Sullivan stopped a left. Corbett put his left on Sullivan's stomach, and then a stomach in quick succession. Both were good blows; the latter made him flinch. Sullivan led, and they got to a clinch. Sullivan hit two times in a clinch, but there were cries of foul. A moment later in a hot rally Corbett split Sullivan's lip with a straight left hander.

SEVENTEENTH ROUND.

Sullivan slow in coming up. He led twice, but both were short. His left hander was simply open-handed. Corbett put his left clean on Sullivan's face without catching anything from the big fellow, and then got home with the same hand on Sullivan's stomach. Although the round was spiritless and neither did anything worth fighting, Corbett did what little fighting there was.

EIGHTEENTH ROUND.

The first blow of the round was a left straight on Sullivan's face. Corbett hit Sullivan, and when the latter came forward smashed him on the nose. A moment later he swung his left on Sullivan's ribs. The big fellow received another rattling right on Corbett's ribs. Sullivan returned with his right on the ribs. Corbett straight jabbed with his left on Sullivan's mouth followed with his left on the nose. A second later, when the big fellow attempted a rush, he was stood off by another straight left, which he ran into.

NINETEENTH ROUND.

Both were easy at first. Sullivan landed on the breast with his left. He tried another, but Corbett was out of range. Corbett put his left twice in quick succession in Sullivan's stomach. It was like two drum-taps. He landed again. Sullivan in the same place. Corbett rushed, but Corbett stopped him with three red-hot ones on the mouth and hit him in the stomach. Corbett hit him with his left. The crowd cheered loudly for Corbett. Sullivan in this round was very easy, while Corbett was fresh and he was at first. The showing of the Californian up to this time was magnificent. He had 90 per cent of the best of it.

TWENTIETH ROUND.

Sullivan is on the defensive. He backed when Corbett went to him. Corbett rushed him to the ropes, and landed three right hander swings, one on the big fellow's left ear, two straight lefts on Sullivan's stomach, and two swinging right on his jaw without return, which set the house to yelling. Then he followed Sullivan to the corner of the ring, and with the same motion, apparently, first hit with his left on the face, and then with right on the stomach. Next he rushed Sullivan to the ropes, and the big fellow seemed defenseless. Corbett used his left and right with impunity, landing clean and hard on neck and jaw. Sullivan was catching it hot and heavy at the close of the round.

TWENTY-FIRST ROUND.

At this point Manager Brady, who was in Corbett's corner, remarked, "Why Jim has him now if he wants to get in and finish him. Why the boy isn't beating hard, and he doesn't put his strength in a blow yet." Just then they came to close quarters. Corbett feinted with his left as if to go for Sullivan's stomach. Down went the big fellow's guard, and quick as a flash around came Corbett's right with the force of a trip-hammer. He had put on his full strength at last. It struck Sullivan straight in the stomach, and sent him groggy. With the bound of a panther after its prey the Californian was on him. He was like a demon. Sullivan was dazed, and his hands fell to his side. Corbett's next blow staggered him, and he followed it up with a shower of rights and lefts. The champion staggered, staggered, and fell full on his face. He lay there until before thirty seconds had passed, and then he rose weak and blood-beanured he rose to his hands and knees, but was too feeble to get up. In attempting to do so he pitched forward again and lay there till the ten seconds were counted off. Corbett had won the championship of the world without ever sustaining as much as a scratch, and was apparently as fresh as at the start, while Sullivan's nose was broken, his lips swollen, and he was severely bruised about the face and ribs.
